Products Are The Solution To Your Tough Flea and Tick Problems

against your pet's flea and tick problem takes more than just getting rid of the pests you see, it requires a complete program that will also kill the flea eggs and larvae that you can't see.

Flea eggs are laid on your dog or cat then roll off wherever your pet spends most of his time... your carpeting, your sofa, the pet's bed, and other areas that you might not even be aware of. Over 95% of the flea population is immature – eggs, larvae and pupae.

Products that only contain an adulticide will kill the mature fleas, but will have no effect on the vast majority of the population that does not reside on the animal. Ticks are harder to kill and take longer to die than fleas. Tick populations usually surge in the early spring, well ahead of the peak flea season, which usually occurs in the late summer. Ticks may take 1-3 years to complete their life cycle. On-animal products do not prevent ticks from crawling onto pets, but once there, they die more quickly with the use of a "wet" product such as a shampoo or spray.

The entire house must be treated, concentrating on dark hiding places. Use a combination of foggers and hand-held sprays. The yard must be treated often, especially during the first two months of spring tick season. Since ticks like dark moist places, keeping the lawn clear, grass mowed and foliage trimmed will limit the tick population.

An integrated flea and tick control strategy must include the use of a combination of products and the use of an Insect Growth Regulator (IGR), such as (S)-Methoprene, to control pests on the animal in the house and outdoors.
